New York State Department of Civil Service

PART 1

Job Duties of a Probation Officer

General Statement Of Duties

Provides evaluation, investigation, and supervision services for persons within the jurisdiction of the courts; does related work as required.

Distinguishing Features of the Class:

This is the beginning position at the professional level in probation work. The duties require the application of modern social work techniques in making evaluations of adults or juveniles and in supervising persons on probation. A Probation Officer is called upon to exercise sound professional judgment in analyzing data and in making recommendations concerning court dispositions. He/she assists persons on probation and other persons whom the probation agency services. A Probation Officer works under supervision of a higher ranking professional employee and may help to supervise the work of Probation Assistants, Probation Officer Trainees, or volunteers.

Probation Officer Trainees who have satisfactorily completed one year of service are automatically appointed to this title.

Examples of Work:

May be assigned to an intake unit to evaluate matters for adjustment at the intake level or to perform supervision of persons in lieu of court action;

Obtains and analyzes social and legal data and prepares reports in relation to matters pending in the courts concerning persons awaiting disposition of the courts;

Interprets conditions of sentence to persons placed under probation supervision, supervises such individuals by ascertaining compliance with conditions of probation, and counsels and assists them in problems related to compliance and to the maintenance of lawful behavior in the community;

Prepares progress reports on persons under supervision and periodically reviews case histories to determine degree of adjustment;

Prepares violation reports and testifies at delinquency hearings;

Establishes and maintains contact with other social and law enforcement agencies and cooperates with them in matters of mutual interest;

Helps to maintain a variety of records utilized by the probation office;

Assists in supervision of Probation Officer Trainees, Probation Assistants, and volunteers.

Required Knowledge, Skills and Abilities:

Basic knowledge of social sciences, including sociology, psychology and economics; basic knowledge of social service programs and other community resources; basic knowledge of laws pertaining to probation work and functions and procedures of Family and Criminal courts; basic knowledge of factors related to crime and delinquency; good judgment in dealing with people; ability to understand, interpret and prepare written material.

Generally Acceptable Training and Experience

Promotion: Satisfactory completion of one year service as Probation Officer Trainee.

Open-competitive: Graduate degree in social work, education, administration, law, sociology, psychology, criminology, or a related field;

OR Bachelor's degree and two years experience in counseling or casework in a recognized agency adhering to acceptable standards in probation, parole, social services, psychiatric or medical social work, or related work;

OR appropriate combination of above training and experience.

Job Duties of a Probation Officer Trainee

General Statement Of Duties

Performs varied duties related to investigation and supervision in a local probation agency while participating in a continuous in-service training program; does related work as required.

Distinguishing Features of the Class:

The trainee level is used to recruit to the probation field college graduates with a career interest in probation. Trainees receive on-the-job training while performing duties of a limited professional nature under close and continuing supervision.

Trainee appointments are for a period of one year, following which incumbents receiving satisfactory ratings will be advanced to the title of Probation Officer without further examination.

Examples of Work:

Assists in the collection and analysis of social and legal history data, and in the preparation of investigation reports concerning cases pending in the courts;

Helps to supervise probationers by counseling and otherwise assisting them to maintain lawful behavior in the community;

Helps to maintain appropriate case records of persons under probation supervision;

Makes home visits and other community contacts to assist in monitoring and adherence to conditions of probation;

Helps to establish and maintain contact with persons and organizations in the community that may provide necessary resources for individuals served by the agency;

May assist in counseling of persons under court order to pay family support when referred by collection unit;

Attends on-the-job and special training sessions and participates in conferences and regular staff meetings;

Studies and reviews literature and other appropriate materials related to probation, criminal justice, and social work to systematically acquire essential knowledge of profession.

Required Knowledge, Skills and Abilities:

Basic knowledge of social sciences, including sociology, psychology and economics; basic knowledge of social service programs and other community resources; basic knowledge of factors related to crime and delinquency; good judgment in dealing with people; ability to understand, interpret and prepare written material.

Generally Acceptable Training and Experience:

Open-competitive: Bachelor's degree from a regionally accredited college or university, or one recognized by the New York State Education Department, with at least thirty (30) credit hours in the social or behavioral sciences.

PART 2

THE SELECTION PROCESS

To be appointed to a Probation Officer or Trainee position you must pass several hurdles.

A. Application

You must complete an application which is reviewed by the county civil service agency. If they determine you meet the minimum qualifications which they have established for the position, they consider you a candidate for the examination.

B. Written Test

Because this examination is "open-competitive" and because the minimum qualifications for the trainee level do not require it, candidates need not have prior experience working as a counselor, caseworker, or probation officer (although it is likely that some candidates will have such backgrounds). Therefore, this test will not measure the kind of knowledge that can only be acquired from experience on the job. The minimum educational background that is required of candidates who are eligible to take the exam ensures that all candidates will have had some exposure to practices and strategies that are commonly used in the working relationship of professionals and clients.

This written test is composed of the following subjects:

1) Establishing and Maintaining Working Relationships with Defendants/Respondents and Probationers

Three quarters of the written test (45 out of 60 questions) will be in this area. As described in the examination announcement, these questions will present situations that are typically encountered in working with clients. Candidates will be required to choose the best analysis of, solution to, or approach in handling the problem described. In addition, some questions may test for understanding of concepts that underlie successful interaction with clients, or even with persons related to or involved with clients. (An officer must recognize that a probationer's family, friends, employer, and other professional contacts are an integral part of the probationer's environment and a constant influence on his or her behavior, including the ability to change.) Some questions will test for a recognition and understanding of concepts that relate to normal and abnormal human development, including behavioral affects of social and psychological problems.

2) Preparing Written Material

This portion of the test will measure your ability to prepare written material. Probation Officers must keep detailed written documentation of their cases. Therefore, the ability to write clearly is crucial to success on the job.

After the test is given, usually the Saturday after the test, candidates have the opportunity to see some (or all) of the questions and their tentative answers. At this review, called the prerating review, candidates are allowed to submit written comments concerning the test as a whole or individual questions and their keys. These comments are then evaluated along with statistical information that has been produced about candidate performance on the individual questions and the different parts of the tests. After extensive analysis, the examination is officially scored.

Then, the New York State Department of Civil Service sends the results to the county which produces an eligible list and mails the scores to the candidates. The county can then begin the process of screening eligible individuals for its openings.

C. Special Requirements

Some counties may require that candidates undergo a character screening or physical examination or possess a driver license before they are appointed to the positions. You should check for any special requirements on the test announcement.

THE WRITTEN TEST STUDY GUIDE

Part 3 includes general tips for taking a multiple-choice test and sample problems and explanations for the two subjects of the written test.

Some Tips On How To Take A Multiple-Choice Test

The written test for Probation Officer/Trainee will consist of multiple-choice questions, with which you are probably quite familiar. The following is a simple example of this kind of test question:

Which one of the following trees is an evergreen?
A. maple
B. oak
C. birch
D. pine

Only one of the four answer choices is correct; the others are wrong in some way or another. The answer to the question is choice D, pine. Its needles stay green all year. The other choices--maple, oak, and birch--all lose their leaves in the fall.

The question above asks you to recall a fact. Other kinds of multiple-choice questions--including those in the Probation Officer/Trainee test--require you to make analyses, solve problems, or choose the best course of action in a given situation. Explanations of these will be given in the sections that follow.

First, here is some general information and advice on approaching the test.

- 1. Read All The Instructions. Be sure you understand them before you start on the questions. Make sure you know which questions you are supposed to answer. The cover of the test booklet or separate instructions should give you the information.
- 2. Read Each Question Carefully. Make sure you are reading what is printed in the test booklet--not what you expect to see or want to see. Read each question carefully, then read all the choices.
 - Make sure you understand each choice before you decide which answer is best. Read all the choices before making your selection.
 - Pick out the one choice that BEST answers the question. In action-oriented questions, for example, the best choice will be the one that tells what people in the job should do most of the time.
 - Answer the question as it is asked in the booklet. Do not assume the question means something it does not say.
- 3. Use Your Time Wisely. You will have ample time to read and answer the questions carefully. Do not waste time, however. Keep working continuously through the test.
- 4. Answer The Easier Questions First, But Answer Every Question. You get just as much credit for an easy question as for a difficult one. Do not take too much time at first on the difficult questions. Proceed to answer all of the easy ones. Then, in the time left over, go back and work on the questions that require more time and thought. If you skip a question, make sure that you leave the response position which corresponds to that question on the separate Answer Sheet vacant.
- 5. Answer Every Question. If you are not sure, guess. There is no "correction for guessing" used on this test, and if you do not answer a question, you will not get credit for it.
 - If you are sure a choice is wrong, stop considering that choice. The questions have four possible answers. Most people see right away that one or two of those answers just cannot be correct. Throw out the choices you can eliminate immediately and concentrate on the others.
 - Choose the best of the choices that remain. Even if one choice seems only slightly better than the other one or two, choose that one. The difference between a right answer and a wrong one can sometimes seem very small.

TIPS ON TAKING THE PROBATION OFFICER/TRAINEE WRITTEN EXAMINATION:

The sample questions on pages 6 through 9 relate to the area of Establishing and Maintaining Working Relationships with Defendants, Respondents and Probationers.

The following is a sample of one kind of question that will be asked in this area.

Sample Question:

Assume that you are a Probation Officer. You are talking with Mrs. Collins, the mother of a 17-year-old male who is a probationer in your current caseload. During the conversation, Mrs. Collins tells you that her husband beats her. Which one of the following is the most appropriate action for you to take in this situation?

- A. Call the police and have her husband arrested.
- B. Tell her that you will use your authority to "straighten out" her husband.
- C. Provide her with information on how to contact services available to her in a time of crisis or need.
- D. Avoid becoming involved, since your responsibility is supervising her son.

Explanation:

Choice A is wrong because calling the police is far too hasty an action to take. You cannot have the husband arrested because you don't know for a fact that he beats Mrs. Collins, only that she says so. This is not enough reason for the police to take action. Furthermore, Mrs. Collins must actually be willing to press charges. She may be afraid of her husband's temper, or ashamed of the way she is treated. It may have taken great effort for her to tell anyone about the beatings. If you immediately call the police, you risk violating her confidence and embarrassing her. You might also bring about another beating if her husband finds out and loses his temper over the contact with police.

Saying you'll "straighten out" her husband, choice B, is wrong because it is an unseemly show of your "authority" over a matter that is not within your authority at all. You are, in effect, telling Mrs. Collins that you will threaten her husband, if need be, in order to change his behavior. You do not have this kind of control over private citizens. Implying that you do would be very unprofessional conduct for an officer. Aside from promising much more than you can expect to deliver, you may make the situation worse by leaving Mrs. Collins alone to face her husband's anger after you have confronted him.

Choice C, providing Mrs. Collins with information on how to get help when an incident arises, is the best choice. Very often, people in distress are not aware of the kinds of services that are available to them. You, as a Probation Officer, are in a position to be familiar with these services and can best help her by providing information about various ways she could get help in dealing with her situation. She may prefer one way to another, so the decision about which to pursue at what time, as well as the responsibility for making the decision itself, rests with Mrs. Collins. You have just provided information, perhaps some guidance and a little direction, without meddling in her life or her husband's.

Avoiding the situation, choice D, is wrong. Aside from being a callous response to what Mrs. Collins has said, you can reason that an improvement in the home situation Mrs. Collins faces would be part of an overall improvement in the home environment of your teenage client. Although you are not professionally involved with Mrs. Collins, your ability to provide the assistance described in choice C above may not only benefit her directly, but also contribute to her son's successful completion of probation.

Another example of the kind of question you can expect in the written test is:

Sample Question:

Mark is a 16-year-old member of a street gang who is suspected of being involved in a number of violent crimes, including armed robbery. Which one of the following factors probably contribute MOST to the development of Mark's juvenile delinquency?

- A. genetic abnormality
- B. faulty personality development
- C. his family's economic need
- D. his social environment

Explanation:

Choice A relies on outmoded and incorrect theories that see criminal behavior as caused by genetic make-up. In these discredited theories, the tendency to commit crimes is thought of as an inherited trait or a by-product of some kind of malformation at the level of the gene or chromosome.

Like choice A, choice B explains away the problem by placing it squarely within Mark himself. It assumes that he was bound to turn out this way, and that no change in his behavior is possible. But there is no information in the question to support this assumption. Choice B is incorrect also.

Choice C has been disproved in many studies that show there is no connection between juvenile delinquency and the economic status of the delinquent's family. Juvenile delinquency is a problem common to all economic levels of society. The fact that Mark is suspected of having committed armed robbery is not proof, by itself, of economic need.

Choice D is correct. Mark is a member of a street gang which functions as a "subculture" within the dominant, law-abiding culture. Group acceptance is based on conforming to the gang's standards. Since Mark's membership in the gang is the one fact mentioned in connection with his criminal behavior, it is reasonable to assume that the gang values lawlessness and violence. Mark's juvenile delinquency is most likely based MAINLY on his needs to be accepted within the group and to gain status by pushing his behavior to new levels of delinquency.

Note that the question asks which of four listed possibilities probably contributed most to the development of Mark's juvenile delinquency. It does not ask for the only contributing factor. A single factor or cause rarely explains human behavior all by itself. The questions on the test recognize this. You will usually be asked for the "most probable" explanation, the "most likely" reason. When selecting your answer, choose the one that fits the facts in the question best, even if that choice might not fit all cases all of the time.

The following example is representative of the kind of "case history" you will see on the written test. There are two sample questions that relate to the case, and each one is presented with an explanation for the correct answer.

Sample Case History:

You are a Probation Officer assigned to the Family Court Intake Unit. Your responsibility is screening cases to determine if they might be handled informally through some type of social service assistance. Among the cases you screen are those of youths under age 16 who are disobedient to their parents, are runaways, and/or are truant from school.

Mrs. Twilley has brought in her son Jimmy, age 14, to Intake. She complains that Jimmy refuses to obey her and often stays out very late, sometimes all night long. Jimmy's attendance and grades at school have fallen off sharply, she says. Mrs. Twilley states that her son hangs around with a group of older boys who have a reputation in the neighborhood as troublemakers. She is also concerned that Jimmy is drinking and using drugs with these teens.

Sample Case History Question #1:

Assume that you are meeting with Mrs. Twilley for the first time. You have not yet met with Jimmy. As the interview with Mrs. Twilley proceeds, she says that she is certain she knows the main reason for her son's trouble. She says that Jimmy has a crush on a 16-year-old girl, one of a few girls who hang out with the youths that Jimmy associates with. Mrs. Twilley does not like any of these neighborhood teens, especially this girl, who is loud and obnoxious, and she has tried to forbid Jimmy to see any of them anymore. Which one of the following is the best way to deal with this information at this stage of the interview?

- A. Tell Mrs. Twilley that her assessment of the situation is probably correct, because Jimmy is trying to impress the girl by hanging around with an older crowd.
- B. Advise Mrs. Twilley that her son's interest in the older girl is only a symptom of a much larger problem.
- C. Caution Mrs. Twilley that her judgment about her son's group may be wrong and she should try not to antagonize him about it.
- D. Ask Mrs. Twilley if there might be any other factors contributing to her son's present behavior besides his interest in the older girl.

Explanation of Case History Question #1:

One of the most important considerations in this question is the fact that the interview is proceeding; it is still going on, as if in the present, between Mrs. Twilley and you, the Probation Officer. Therefore, you have not yet heard all of the information pertaining to Jimmy. Without hearing anything other than Mrs. Twilley's low opinion of the neighborhood teens, you are not in a position to speculate on the cause of Jimmy's behavior. Therefore, it is wrong to assume at this point that Mrs. Twilley has fully understood and presented the situation (choice A), or to conclude that Jimmy has a much larger problem (choice B), or to turn the tables on Mrs. Twilley and speak as if you are likely to side with her son (choice C). All of these choices involve premature decisions.

Choice D is correct because, true to good interview practice, you have not stopped in mid-stream to make a judgment about the case, but are still trying to acquire as much pertinent information about Jimmy as possible.

If this were the actual written test, there might be more questions concerned with other aspects of this interview or the interview to come with Jimmy. Further information would be presented as needed to answer these additional questions. For now, try answering the next sample question, about the Probation Officer's disposition of the Intake case, with what you already know about Mrs. Twilley and Jimmy.

Sample Case History Question #2:

In making the decision to adjust this case informally or to refer it to court for formal adjudication, which one of the following is most important to determine?

- A. whether Mrs. Twilley's complaint is justified and can be sustained in court
- B. whether there is any responsibility on Mrs. Twilley's part for her son's behavior
- C. whether Mrs. Twilley and Jimmy could work out their differences with the assistance of counseling
- D. whether Jimmy is willing to try changing his behavior to conform to his mother's wishes

Explanation of Case History Question #2:

Referring a case to court is a serious step. Court calendars are crowded, and judges have little time to consider subtle personal factors in reviewing a case. Under these conditions the judicial system can lose sight of people as individuals.

In this case, the facts indicate that Jimmy is attempting to establish himself as an individual. His defiance of parental rules and preference for a group his mother dislikes are within the range of typical adolescent behavior. Jimmy's mother is reacting as many parents of teenagers have reacted before her. If the case goes to court, Jimmy will have to deal with several more levels of authority who understand him, personally, no better than his mother does. It will probably be harder for him to find constructive ways to be himself. Jimmy's mother will see an institution--the court--taking over part of her role as parent. If what she really wants is less strain in her life and in her relationship with Jimmy, she may be disappointed to find more strain instead.

The ideal solution at present would be to get mother and son to reach an agreement between themselves. They both would be more willing to live with an arrangement that they themselves had made. It seems clear that such an arrangement would require the assistance of a counselor to help the two begin the process of talking to and understanding each other. As this has not yet been tried, it is most important for the officer to determine if the chance of success for counseling is good. Thus, choice C is the correct answer.

Choice A is wrong because it puts the needs of the judicial system (whether the complaint will hold up in court) ahead of the needs of the clients (what approach will solve their problem). Further, it assumes that the legal aspects of the situation are serious enough to warrant adjudication. From what has been revealed of Jimmy's behavior, this does not seem to be true.

Neither choice B nor choice D is an appropriate consideration because each assigns blame to one person. Choice B implies that Mrs. Twilley is at fault for her son's behavior, while choice D implies that only Jimmy needs to change his behavior. This matter is better to address in counseling sessions aimed at reconciling the differences between Mrs. Twilley and Jimmy. The counselor will help both mother and son see how their behavior affects each other.

The following is an example of the questions which will be used in the area of Preparing Written Material. There will be thirty (30) questions in this area which will be weighted 0.5 each.

Information Presentation

There will be twenty (20) test questions that take the form of the following sample. Read the sample carefully, select the choice which presents the information most clearly and accurately, and then study the explanations given for the correct and incorrect answers.

Sample Questions:

1. Which one of the following clearly indicates who is have the mechanical difficulties?
 - A. The officer called in, while following the defendant, that he was having mechanical difficulties and would probably have to pull over.
 - B. The officer called in, while following the defendant, that the defendant was having mechanical difficulties and would probably have to pull over.
2. Which one of the following more clearly presents the information?
 - A. He was a high school dropout but obtained his G.E.D. certificate and is now employed at two jobs.
 - B. He was a high school dropout but is now employed at two jobs and has received his G.E.D. certificate.

Explanations:

In question 1, choice A does not make it clear who was having the difficulty, the officer of the defendant. Choice B, the BETTER ANSWER to the question, states that it was the defendant.

In question 2, choice B does not make clear whether T.J. Smith is the brother or a third person. Choice A, the BETTER ANSWER to the question, identifies the brother as T.J. Smith, making a total of two people who are meeting.

Paragraph Organization

There will also be ten test questions that are designed to measure a candidate's ability to organize a paragraph correctly.

The sentences are out of sequence, but when they are correctly arranged they form a connected well-organized paragraph. Read the sentences and then answer the question by deciding in what order to arrange the sentences.

Sample Question:

1. Eventually, they piece all of this information together, and make a choice.
2. Before actually deciding upon a job, people usually think about several possibilities.
3. They imagine themselves in different situations, and in so doing, they probably think about their interests, goals, and abilities.
4. Choosing an occupation is an important decision to make.

Which one of the following is the best arrangement of these sentences?

- A. 2-3-1-4
- B. 2-3-4-1
- C. 4-2-1-3
- D. 4-2-3-1

Explanation:

The best arrangement of the sentences is 4-2-3-1. Sentence 4 introduces the main idea of the paragraph: "choosing an occupation." Sentences 2-3-1 then follow up on this idea by describing, in order, the steps involved in making such a choice. Choice D is the BEST ANSWER to the question.

SUMMARY

This guide provided you with information about the job of Probation Officer and the selection process used by most New York State jurisdictions to hire Probation Officers and Trainees. It then offered advice on how to take a multiple-choice test such as this one will be, with specific suggestions for how best to proceed through easy and more difficult questions. The areas that make up the Probation Officer/Trainee written test were discussed in detail, and sample questions for each were presented along with explanations for the correct and incorrect answers.

Other sources of help ...

There are other sources available to you that may help you in preparing for the written test. You might wish to talk with others to compare your knowledge and experiences, or simply to review on your own what you have learned from your educational and employment background. There are many texts on probation which can be found at local libraries or perhaps at your own place of study or employment. You do not need to consult such reference books to prepare for this examination, but obviously a greater familiarity with the profession should be the goal of anyone desiring to become a Probation Officer.

The day of the test . . .

Finally, be sure you know how to get to your particular test center. It is best to expect that many people will be taking this as well as other examinations at the same time at your site, so give yourself plenty of time to find suitable parking in the area, or to make connections via public transportation. (Remember, mass transit is often on a reduced schedule on Saturdays.) If you do not have to rush to make the test's starting time, you will have a better chance to stay calm, to collect yourself and be confident in what you know, and ultimately to perform to the best of your ability on the written test. Good luck!
